作文

Young students in school should be taught academic knowledge by teachers. Numbers of people focus on students' academic performance, but others are targeting on teaching students different right from wrong.

In some people's views, acquiring academic knowledge and gaining a good performance are regarded as two most important things at school, because it makes possible for students to get a stable job. For instance, students are likely to earn more money in their workplace because they devote enough effort in academic performance at school, thereby improving their living standards.

However, good values and moralities also are two vital factors in students' adult life, because a good value makes it possible for young students to be a good citizen. It is easy for well-educated students to discriminate right and wrong because they were though good values by teachers, and they will make correct decisions in their adolescence. Therefore, young students will become good citizens and build a good society together.

In my view, students are supposed to imparted good values and moralities in childhood to distinguish right and wrong, thereby doing a correct judgement. Most of young offenders lack social regulations, because of the insufficient ethic lessons in school.

In conclusion, students need to be imparted more good values. And schools are supposed to take ethic lessons into account rather than teaching academic knowledge by rote to improve students' legal consciousness.
