题目: Some people think that children should obey the rules or do what their parents and teachers want them to do. Other people think that children controlled too much cannot deal with problem themselves in adulthood.

Children are expected to obey rules either at home or at school. Some people think It is necessary to lead children to behave in an acceptable way, although others think children should be given more freedom. In my view, children should listen to their parents and teachers.

Obeying rules at a young age can help children develop good habits and succeed in the future.

For example, punctual pupils are less likely to be later for meetings in the future. After being told table manners at a young age, those people can behave in a right way during dinners with clients and this enables working people to communicate well with clients. In these cases, those people can show respect to either supervisors or clients in the workforce and probably have a fulfilling career.

On the other hand, with too much control, children may not be able to think independently and less likely to achieve success. Those children are used to listening to their teachers' direction and they are not required to think by their own. They are required to memorize the method to maths problems from teachers instead of being creative to think alternative methods. In this case, they lose chances to foster imagination and develop potential. When they enter the workforce, they are not able to solve complex problems without teachers' direction.

In my opinion, after understanding the importance of obeying rules, children do not break laws and can be good citizens in the future. For example, with the education of obeying rules from teachers, those people are not willing to commit crimes like robbery. As a result, the crime rate will decline and citizens can enjoy their lives in a safer society.
