

33% of the American ate in fast food restaurant once a week in 2006.

或 In 2006, the percentage of American who ate fast food once a week reached 33%. >

In general, visitors had a high level of satisfaction towards the new theatre, particularly club members, (with information being less satisfying.)

The majority of (over 90%) customers regarded the facilities of this new theatre as over satisfying.

In particular, the percentage of club members who voted 'excellent' for this aspect reached 72%, which was just slightly higher than that of general public.

In addition, approximately 25% of customers considered the facilities as just 'satisfied'.

... was/were consistently the largest/highest,
ranging/increasing from ... to

To be specific, / In particular, [补充特点1]

Conversely, / By contrast, / In addition, [补充特点2]

... and ... had similar, with a higher ... for the former/latter.

Audience aged from 7 to 14 and those from 25 to 35 had similar attendance rates in cinema, with a higher percentage for the former.

Only a small proportion/number/amount of , the figures for which was/were consistently.

Only a small proportion of the British population aged over 35 went to the cinema, the figure for which was below 10% before 2013 ~~and~~ went up slightly to about 12% in 2016.