I have been told lots of stories since my childhood, and I love all kinds of fictions or fairy tales. Now I'd like to share a story that my cousin told me several months ago. It was a story about how James, a homeless guy, also a former drug addict, was saved by a cat called Bob. Before meeting up Bob, James was abandoned by his family and tried to support himself by singing on street. One night in his flat, James discovers Bob and ever after that, Jame's life was transformed, not only because Bob draws more crowds of people to watch Jame's performance, but also because the cat gives him lots of love and great companionship, letting him learn more about responsibilities.

As to why I remember the story...firstly, it must the plots that impress me and touch me a lot. I mean, it's almost like a fairy tale, thinking about how a street cat can actually turn a man's life around. Also, I remember it because it's a true story, something really happened in our lives.

Moving onto my feeling about the it...I have to say I love the story. As a cat owner, I have been constantly touched by animals' unconditional love. I mean, relationship between human beings can be quite complicated. In contrast, animals always give us pure love that can warm our hearts. What is depicted is the strong bond between pets and their owners. In addition, I like the story because it's kind of profound. It's a story about being given a second chance. Sometimes, we might mess up our lives, experiencing hard time, etc. But as long as we have some love left in our hearts, we can actually achieve a better life.
