1) On what occasions would people be willing to get to know new people?

2) Where would people get to know new people?

3) How do people start a conversation?

常见问法 6 (请说明 XX 应该怎么做去达到某一目的)

- 参考回答:

I guess no one will deny that it's important that people should know how to start a conversation.

But if we are going to come up with some specific proposals, I think it requires more analysis.

I guess perhaps we need to figure out what the current problem is, and then we can have a solution.

For example, it's obvious that many people don't know how to start a conversation and feel awkward during silence, and the reason behind it, I guess, is that people don't know how to ask questions.

So, now we know the cause, then we can have a solution. Firstly, it is important that people can talk about themselves before they ask others something. For example, if we want to ask about people's hobbies, we could talk about our hobbies first. In this way, people will be likely to continue the conversations.

Also, maybe it is vital that people could learn some communication skills from some online platforms like TED videos about conversation strategies.

1) Do you think old people and young people can share interests?

- 属于类型:

常见问法 2 (请说出 XX 对于不同人群的区别)

- 参考回答:

Indeed, I think things are totally different for people of different ages.

Since I myself am a young person, I will first talk about someone like me, and what the situation is about them.

For young people, I guess it's like it's hard for us to share our interests with old people. Specifically, most young people love up-to-date inventions like new iPhones. We use our smartphones to take pictures, manipulate images, join discussions, and google answers to questions.

But when it comes to someone who is an older person, things might be different. I am not pretty sure, but if I am allowed to imagine here, I'd like to say that maybe they prefer to use dumbphones since they are cheaper and easier to operate than smartphones. New inventions are so complex for most older people that they are reluctant to access them.

This is actually what I think about this issue. While I am sure about the situation for someone like me, namely, a young person, it's hard to say that the same situation applies to older people as well.

Why should children be nice to their classmates? let me think……it is true that children should learn to be kind to their classmates and it's beneficial for their future development.

But if we are going to delve into the reasons behind it, I guess some factors might be responsible.

Firstly, I guess it has something to do with society as a whole. I mean, a lot of children nowadays actually are educated to be kind to their classmates, so other children might be just following their lead, or, how to say, to comply with the standard, or, you know, the Herd Behavior Effect.

But, of course, I guess it also has something to do with individual preferences. I mean, different people have different views, and different values, so it's very common that some children could make lifelong friends if they are kind to others in school.

Finally, if we are looking for more reasons, I guess it may have something to do with the economy, I guess? But I am not sure since there are different kinds of friendship, some are beneficial for close friends to work together to establish successful careers in the future while others are not.

Oh, yeah, it is true that there are still many people to go to the library to read and study. I guess this issue is kind of complicated; if I have to create different categories for that, it might be kind of challenging.

But based on what I have seen around me, and the situation in China, I guess I can list two of them.

Firstly, the majority of college students love to read and study in the library. It's because the environment there can help them be more concentrated on their studies. Also, they can ask librarians for help when they want to search for some materials. Secondly, some parents prefer to bring their kids to read books in the library to develop their kids' reading habits.

Can I just say very important? Yeah, because that's the first word popping into my head. For me, it's kind of a given that we should make a plan before traveling.

Of course, some people might disagree; they might think it's not necessary to plan ahead of time, and they might think it's because a plan could inhibit flexibility and lower the possibilities of unexpected and favorable encounters, like serendipity.

This may sound reasonable, but I still think it's vital to make a plan before visiting a city. First of all, I guess it's vital for every individual. Take me as an example, I think planning a trip in advance allows me to consider thoughtfully where I'd like to go and what I'd like to experience.

Also, I think there will also be some societal benefits. Just imagine, if all people make plans, then they could enjoy a comparatively safe group trip because they could be well-prepared for their trip purposefully.

So, to sum up, from the two perspectives, both individual and societal, I think it is important that people should plan ahead before visiting a city.

Indeed, I think things are totally different for people of different places.

Since I myself am from the countryside, I will first talk about someone like me, and what the situation is about them.

For people from the countryside, I guess it's like the city is exposed to more noise. For example, road traffic is one of the largest sources of city noise due to the huge number of motor vehicles on the road. Also, there is endless construction work here and there in the city, and the sound of big machines is loud and annoying.

But when it comes to someone who is from the city, things might be different. I am not pretty sure, but if I am allowed to imagine here, I'd like to say that maybe they are not so sensitive to the noise in the city since they are accustomed to that. However, in the countryside, there are fewer cars and less construction work. It's quieter.

Actually, I really gave some thought to questions like this.

I kind of have the feeling that things might be different in the past, in the current way, and in the future as well.

Firstly, nowadays. Because it's the current situation, I know it very well. It's like there is a lot of pollution here and there, like water pollution, noise pollution, and gas pollution.

Secondly, if I look back, like, in the past 20 years I have been through, it was like the river was clearer in our hometown; there was less traffic noise and fewer vehicle emissions.

But if we are talking about something from a more remote past, I am not sure, but I have heard from my family members. My mother actually said when she was a little girl, she could drink water directly from the rivers. There were birds singing around without traffic noise. You never needed to wear a mask because the air was always fresh and clean.

Finally, if I am to predict the future, I am not sure, but I have the feeling that people will strive to protect our environment, and pollution will be under control.

I guess this issue is kind of complicated; if I have to create different categories for that, it might be kind of challenging.

But based on what I have seen around me, and the situation in China, I guess I can list two of them.

Firstly, children could start with their family history to learn history. For example, parents could draw a family tree including the kid's siblings, cousins, parents, aunts/uncles, and grandparents, telling stories about family members.

Secondly, children could watch some video documentaries to learn about history. For example, parents could choose some interesting, animated versions for their kids, like the video series about history for kids.

I know the reality is actually far more complicated, but as far as I know, these two types may be two good examples.

Oh, yeah, it is true that people could feel proud of themselves because of something.

I guess this issue is kind of complicated; if I have to create different categories for that, it might be kind of challenging.

But based on what I have seen around me, and the situation in China, I guess I can list two of them.

Firstly, people could feel proud of themselves when they learn some new recipes of different styles like Indian food, Japanese food, and Mexican food. They could feel even happier when they share those recipes with their family members.

Secondly, people may feel proud of themselves when they lose weight through persisting in doing exercise for a long period of time. For example, someone may swim every morning for half a year, and loses 20 pounds!

I know the reality is actually far more complicated, but as far as I know, these two types may be two good examples.

Why would people prefer to study alone rather than join teamwork? let me think……it is true that some people are not keen on cooperation in groups.

But if we are going to delve into the reasons behind it, I guess some factors might be responsible.

Firstly, I guess it has something to do with society as a whole. I mean, a lot of people nowadays actually value their free will and uniqueness, so other people might be just following their lead, or, how to say, to comply with the standard, or, you know, the Herd Behavior Effect.

But, of course, I guess it also has something to do with individual preferences. I mean, different people have different views, and different values, so it's very common that some people think that group work could waste a lot of time when members have set group meeting schedules but have to postpone them because of personal issues.

Finally, if we are looking for more reasons, I guess it may have something to do with the economy, I guess? But I am not sure since there are different kinds of group work, some are expensive due to the expenses of commuting and dining out while others are not.

To sum up, there are a lot of reasons behind this phenomenon, but I guess I just mentioned the most important two or three reasons.

Can I just say very important? Yeah, because that's the first word popping into my head. For me, it's kind of a given that we should be on time.

Of course, some people might disagree; they might think it's not necessary to be punctual, and they might think it's because it has something to do with society as a whole. I mean, a lot of people tend to be late for several minutes, or even half an hour.

This may sound reasonable, but I still think it's vital to be on time.

First of all, I guess it's vital for every individual. Take me as an example, I think that punctuality could earn reliability. Therefore, people would like to trust me which facilitates future in-depth cooperation.

Also, I think there will also be some societal benefits. Just imagine, if all people keep punctuality, then people will save a lot of time of meaningless waiting, and thus, work efficiency increases rapidly.

So, to sum up, from the two perspectives, both individual and societal, I think it is important that people should be on time.

常见问法 2 (请说出 XX 对于不同人群的区别)

- 参考回答:

Indeed, I think things are totally different for people of different ages.

Since I myself am a young person, I will first talk about someone like me, and what the situation is about them.

For young people, I guess it's like we complain more due to our lack of patience. For example, in a restaurant, if our dishes couldn't be prepared on time, we could easily get annoyed and have complaints to waiters or waitresses.

But when it comes to someone who is an older person, things might be different. I am not pretty sure, but if I am allowed to imagine here, I'd like to say that maybe they are more patient and understanding. It's possible that they will observe the surroundings to identify whether the restaurant is busy. They may ask a waiter or waitress when their dishes could be prepared rather than complain to him/her.

This is actually what I think about this issue. While I am sure about the situation for someone like me, namely, a young person, it's hard to say that the same situation applies to older people as well.
