主体段落二: However, the fast development of computers can positively contribute to job creation. Although the intelligent computerized system will eliminate jobs, it will create a demand for new job positions. For computers to function properly, humans will be needed to check work, improve it and manage it. It is predicted that the new positions will require additional skills for managing the interface between technology and humans. Therefore, computers can promote human progress.

主体段落三: Moreover, computerization can help human beings to cope with substantial social problems. For example, an Israeli company called 'Prospera' has developed a system that uses a machine learning system that can identify signs of insect damage in plant images as well as analyze plant nutrition data, weather forecasts, and other data to predict if a particular plant is at risk of becoming sick, which can positively contribute to agriculture. Therefore, it is worthwhile to enhance computer technology.

cooperation

- In sports, the performance of each player matters the achievement of the whole team. For example, in basketball, each one has different roles and depends on other players in a team. That is to say, the defensive players are responsible for keeping the other team from scoring while the offensive players should score so as to win the game.

competition

- The spirit of competition can be cultivated by joining sports, which is crucial for self-growth. In order to win a game, the players will evaluate their own strengths and weaknesses by comparing with other competitors. If they have a strong desire for victory, they will keep practicing their skills. Therefore, it is competition that motivates them to gain progress.
